

FAITH CURES.

The untimely decease of Dr. George M. Seard will be deeply regretted for years to come, especially because he had given himself so zealously and intelligently to the investigation of obscure mental phenomena and their relations to disease. At the time of his death he thought himself on the threshold of valuable knowledge respecting the trance state. He had settled some details, and a unifying principle was almost in sight. Happily he had inspired other men with a spirit of industrious research, and the investigations will go on. One of his associates, Professor Thwing, of Brooklyn, entertained at a private house in that city, a few days ago, a company of about thirty literary and scientific gentlemen with a series of experiments and explanations of trance phenomena. The Professor operated successfully with vitalized handkerchiefs, "cured" neuralgia and rheumatism, and in other respects imitated without blasphemy the "faith cures" so boastfully advertised by "the Brooklyn Apostle." A large number of people are operating in his kind of medicine; for all of them we may have a kind of respect, except when they degrade religion to make money. A vitalized handkerchief as an experiment, or a piece of philanthropy, is well enough; but as a ten-dollar piece of religious merchandise it is an intolerable nuisance to any community. Professor Thwing shows that the handkerchief has nothing to do with the effects produced, though it may seem to take feeling out of a hand or pain out of a tooth. It is the confident expectations of this result that does the work.

For ages, as a black art, thimmesmerizing, psychologizing, etc., etc., has gone on in the world as a money-getting industry. Sometimes the operator is a showman. oftener he is a doctor; occasionally he is a blaspheming quack, using religion to inspire confidence and get greenbacks. It is high time that men of learning, character and research, whose office the public respects, should give the whole subject protracted and thorough study. Professor Thwing has made a specialty of curing sea-sickness by the trance sleep. He is so successful that in a few years the steamship companies may be expected to advertise that they carry trance-producing doctors on all their vessels, has also shown that this sleep is useful in surgical cases, and in some diseases. It is a perfect sleep, not broken or stereotyped, but quiet and deep as an infant's healthful slumber. The unexplained marvels belong not to the trance sleep but to the trance wake (we mean no pun), or to that state in which all the activities of the body are exercised while the subject knows nothing of what he is doing, and is under the complete control of the operator. The subject does whatever he is told to do; he would shoot or stab anybody in the room if told to do it. He has no sense of moral distinctions. He obeys blindly, cheerfully, innocently. Here the trance state opens out upon morals, public justice and religion. It may furnish the long-sought clew to demoniacal possession. It may open a door to disembodied existence. It may furnish a new test of criminality in conduct. If somebody could set as many honest men at work in the field as there are rogues making a living out of it, and showmen honestly earning a livelihood by working wonders, we might expect some highly important additions to our knowledge; we could at least get this obscure region so far out into sunshine that charlatans could no longer plunder the poor by making merchandise of its forces. The active state of trance is certainly only a modification of the active state of sleep. We mean by these phrases a state in which the intellect is at work in the usual way, or are entirely suspended. The difference seems to be that the trance sleep is deeper, more completely shuts the senses up in repose. In short, somnambulism is merely a mode of trance; and some forms of sleep present kindred phenomena. But what puzzles philosophy is the mode in which the operator clutches the will of the subject and has the key of it in his possession all through the trance sleep. It is pretty plain that operators acquire this power by practice, and a "mesmerist" of twenty years' practice may have a vast repertoire of experiments and the power of subjugating almost any one. We hardly know what makes a man a good subject or why Professor Thwing and others select subjects so readily. And here, too, practice is an element. A trained subject may possibly know what he is doing, though he cannot help doing it, just as a man may know that he is dreaming. This knowledge may help to make the show interesting—the "mesmerized" performer "putting on style" to please the company; when he is told he has the toothache he may "do the motions," with great enthusiasm.

We are not dealing here with anything new. All that is new is the serious attempt to get the business out of the hands of mercenary people by study of the mental and physical laws that are concerned in the vast region abounding with unclassified and remarkable facts. Dr. Carpenter in England, and Dr. Baird in this country and other students of these phenomena have given a healthy impulse to these very important investigations, and just now many people may be profited by knowing that blasphemy is a gratuitous and parasitic addition to the art of psychologic healing.

FONDNESS FOR FORGERY.

More of the Crooked Doings of G. W. Lindsey, the Lightning Rod Agent.

One day last week the BAZOO noted the arrival in Sedalia of Isaac Smith, a farmer who resides near Houstonia, and his appearance before Squire Halstead, asking for a warrant for a man named Geo. W. Lindsey, who has been traveling through this section of Missouri for some months past, ostensibly engaged in the business of selling lightning rods.

Lindsey, according to Smith's story, had stolen a horse from him, and in addition had forged a note on L. Jones, of Houstonia, for $25. Subsequently it was learned that Lindsey had stolen a team of horses from a gentleman residing at Montserrat.

Lindsey attempted to leave this section of country, but was overtaken at Booneville and arrested, and is now held on the charge of grand larceny.

Since his incarceration still other crooked transactions have come to light, as the following correspondence, received at this office last night, will go to testify:

OTTERVILLE, May 8th.
EDITOR BAZOO—Two men, calling themselves Lindsey and Allen, who purport to be agents of a lightning rod company in Ohio, contracted with me and put up rods on my house, for which I gave them my note for $20, payable at the First National bank of Sedalia on the 25th day of December next. A few days after, Lindsey came to my house and proposed to take $13 if I would pay the cash. His proposition was accepted. I paid him the money and took in my note, and he went on his way rejoicing to Pleasant Grove, where he cashed a note on me for $20. Mr. Wm. Burger being the purchaser. This was on Sunday evening, the 4th inst., and on Monday morning Mr. Burger came to see me and said he had bought my note of Lindsey. I told him that I had bought it myself and paid him $13. He then showed me the note, and the signature was a forgery. Mr. Burger left in a hurry, on the lookout for Lindsey, and no doubt he was feeling the wrath to come. Yours, truly,

JEREMIAH TOMLINSON.
The arrest of Lindsey has certainly been the cause of ridding the country of a sleek crook, and it is to be hoped he will be landed within the walls of the state prison.

ASHBURNHAM, MASS., Jan. 14, 1880

I have been very sick over two years. They all gave me up as past cure. I tried the most skillful physicians, but they did not reach the worst part. The lungs and heart would fill up every night and distress me, and my throat was very bad. I told my children I never should die in peace until I had tried Hop Bitters. I have taken two bottles. They have helped me very much indeed. I am now well. There was a lot of sick folks here who have seen how they helped me, and they used them and are now cured, and feel as thankful as I do that there is so valuable a medicine made.

Death of Judge Adams.

Judge Washington Adams died suddenly at his residence, in Booneville, of heart disease yesterday morning, at 3 o'clock.

He was born in Christian county, Ky., in 1814. His father and mother were natives of Virginia, from which state they emigrated to Garrard county, Ky., where they were married. After their marriage they moved to Christian county, and from there, in 1816, to Howard county, Mo., bringing with them the subject of this sketch, then but two years old. He was sent to such schools as were then to be found in Missouri, but was more indebted to himself than to teachers for his education, which, in addition to English, embraced the usual course in Latin and Greek. After completing his academic course, he entered the office of Peyton R. Hayden, a distinguished lawyer at Booneville, where he remained for four years in diligent application to the study of his chosen profession, assisted and encouraged by the kind advice of his able instructor, at the end of which time he obtained license (1835), and at once entered upon a lucrative practice at Booneville. His professional career was characterized by great ability and an unspotted integrity, securing the confidence of his clients and winning for himself a well-deserved success. December 27, 1871, he was appointed by Governor Brown to fill the seat on the supreme bench made vacant by the resignation of Judge Currier, and afterwards, at the election in November, 1872, he was elected to fill the balance of the term. This position he held until October, 1874, when he resigned. His history on the bench will appear from his opinions contained in nine volumes of the supreme court reports, commencing with volume forty-nine. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1875, where his knowledge and research were fully recognized. Judge Adams was emphatic and positive in his opinions kind in disposition, and a member of the Episcopal church. He was married in Booneville in 1840 to Eliza, daughter of William Brown, of Cynthiana, Ky. They had three children all of whom are living.

MOODY AND SANKEY.

They Have Returned from Successful Revival Work Abroad.

Preaching to Noisy Oxford and Cambridge Students in England.

New York Tribune, May 7th.

Moody and Sankey, the famous evangelists, arrived here yesterday morning by the steamship Alaska, after an absence of over eighteen months. A Tribune reporter called upon them in the afternoon at the residence of L. Horatio Biglow, No. 1 Rutherford place, where they are temporarily staying. Mr. Moody was suffering too much from the effects of the sea voyage to be seen, but Mr. Sankey appeared in splendid health. He is looking somewhat stouter than when last here but otherwise he is unchanged.

"Yes," he said, in answer to the reporter's congratulations upon his appearance, "I was never better in my life. From the day I left this country I have not had one moment's sickness. Mr. Moody, too, has enjoyed unusual health, and he would be about now but he is not as good a seaman as I am. In fact he is about the worst seaman I have ever known. In regard to our work abroad I would say that at our first visit to England the clergy of the Established church did not receive us cordially. I could probably more correctly describe their reception of us by a harsher phrase, but I will simply say that it was by no means cordial. This time, however, they warmly welcomed us. They saw that we were the means of bringing their souls, for our work was then as it has been everywhere, not to start an opposition to the Established church, but on the contrary to do all in our power to aid them. It took them some time to realize this fully, but they have done so and I want to say publicly that I could not have asked for a more cordial and hearty reception than Mr. Moody and I received from the clergymen of England.

"Nearly all our work was done in the provinces. We began in the northeast of England, took in all the chief cities and towns except London, where we did but little reserving it for a later visit, and then established our headquarters at Swansea, Wales. Here we met with immense success; in fact, we did everywhere. The places in the United Kingdom we look back upon with most pleasure are Oxford and Cambridge. We were invited by some of the leading clergymen of Cambridge to visit that famous seat of learning and preach there, but a large number of students resolved that they would not allow us to hold our meetings. On the other hand, an equally large, if not larger number, declared that we should preach, and so every one, even Mr. Moody, feared that we would have a great disturbance at our meetings between the two sets of young men. The night of our first meeting, there were at least a thousand students present. Those that were friendly to us sat in front; those opposed to us remained in the rear. When Mr. Moody began to preach, a great noise was heard in the back of the hall. Every student there began stamping on the floor with his cane and kicking his feet, and in fact they made such a fearful row, it was almost impossible for Mr. Moody to proceed. He stopped in the middle of his sermon and called out in a loud voice: 'All those in this hall who believe in the Lord, will please rise.' All the students in front, arose. 'Now,' continued Mr. Moody 'to all those who do not believe with us, I simply say we have hired this hall to hold a religious meeting, as we have a perfect right to do. We are conducting ourselves as gentlemen, and I appeal to your sense of fairness if all who come in and interfere with us are not acting ungentlemanly.'

"Mr. Moody said this so quietly, and it was so different from what the students expected, that it appeared to make every one of them ashamed, and all the noisy ones left the hall. They came back, however, one by one until the whole school joined us. And they were with us not only at that meeting but at every other meeting we held at Cambridge. Mr. Moody so won them over to the Lord, that when we left England, we had not in the whole United Kingdom more earnest, devoted workers than the students of Cambridge. The recollection of the great number of fine, promising young men that we saved from ruin at Cambridge and Oxford—for it was at Oxford pretty much as it was at Cambridge—is what makes me say that I look back with most pleasure to my work at those places.

"We spent a short time in Paris, and our meetings there, too, were very successful. We had an interpreter who would translate Mr. Moody's sermons into French. We sang first a French then an English hymn, and, strange as it may appear, we drew enormous crowds. "I am now going to my home in Newcastle, Pennsylvania. Mr. Moody will go to his home in Northfield, Mass. Our purpose in coming over here was simply to rest ourselves. In October we will return to England and begin our last campaign in Great Britain. Our work will be exclusively confined to London. In the evening Mr. Sankey attended the Cooper Union Gospel temperance meeting, where he sang some of his hymns.

They called a meeting to consider the proposition, and the people set down upon it, and now the bondholders won't take fifty cents, and we are no nearer a compromise than we were years ago.
